

A job is a specific role or position that someone performs to earn money or gain experience. It may be temporary or permanent, part-time or full-time, and may not necessarily be related to a person's long-term goals or aspirations.

A career, on the other hand, refers to a series of jobs or roles that a person pursues over a period of time, usually in a particular industry or field. A career involves building skills and expertise, gaining experience, and making progress towards achieving one's long-term goals and aspirations. It is a long-term path that someone follows to develop their skills, achieve their personal and professional goals, and potentially advance within their chosen field.

In summary, a job is a specific role or position, while a career is a long-term path of professional growth and development.